

Dr Steven Schofield was, for four years, research fellow in the Department of Science and Technology at the University of Manchester. This was followed by work with the Project on Demilitarisation in Leeds.

A specialist in the field of arms conversion in the post-Cold War era – he is the author of a number of studies, including Bradford University's Peace Studies Research Reports: Employment and Security: Alternatives to Trident (1986) and (with Malcolm Dando and Michael Ridge, Arms Conversion in the United Kingdom (1992). In 1997, with Nick Lewer, he was co-author of the book Non-Lethal Weapons: A Fatal Attraction?

In December 2002 his report: The UK and Non-offensive Defence An Introductory Study on the Implications of the UK Adopting a Non-offensive Defence Stance, was launched in the Commons by former defence minister Peter Kilfoyle.

In addition to various community regeneration assignments in the Bradford area, Steve is currently working with the British American Security Information Council [BASIC]. His recent report for BASIC: Oceans of Work: Arms Conversion Revisited, sets out a civilised programme for the future.
